Module 1: AUTHENTIC KORČULA - walking city tour

Stroll through the city surrounded by walls and towers that takes away your breath even at present days. The city's grid, preserved in its original herringbone pattern and positioned as if immersed in the Pelješac Channel, turns the town into a dominant, yet enchanting silhouette in the landscape. The first written document, stemming from the tenth century, mentions the town being surrounded by walls. Developing rapidly, it became a modern urban area ahead of its time, with over six hundred inhabitants. To regulate life, the local administration issued the oldest legal act in this part of Europe, The Statute of the Town and Island, in 1214. It is the first code of law in the world that prohibited every form of slavery. The world's first traveller, Marko Polo, took his first steps on its stone-paved streets. At the intersection of trade routes, through the strong development of crafts and artisans, Korčula made influence on its surroundings, while, at the same time, adorning itself and transforming into an Adriatic Aphrodite. With the completion of the construction of the three-aisled cathedral and the arrangement of the facade did Marko Andrijić deliver the final touch of beauty and the defining vista of today's town. The plaque to the first Croatian king Tomislav (925), placed at the land entrance to the town for the anniversary of one thousand years of the Croatian kingdom, clearly reflects the historical awareness of Korčulan people despite many occupations and claims through the course of history.

After the basics, let our guides, born in Korčula, immerse you into legends and intrigues of the town through interesting and informative expert guidance.

The family farm was founded out of dedication to nature and a desire to revive traditional methods of producing traditional Dalmatian and Korčulan products. The activity is based on centuries-old tradition and represents the synergy of medicine, modern lifestyles and and classical production methods. The farm connects health and tourism through the distinctive flavours of their products. A diligent team, lead by the farm owner, continously develops products recognizable on the market. Marmalades made from local fruits bring inovation to the spreads segment, while extra virgin olive oil forms the basis of Dalmatian cuisine. In response to business challenges, the production of the first Korčulan gin was launched, which, after receiving many awards, quickly achieved intenational recognition.

We invite you to take part in the presentation of an authetic Korčulan story of sustainable organic production, with an emphasis on the challenge of balancing quality and quantity. Module 3: AUTHENTIC KORČULA – vinery

The winemaking production of the island of Korčula dates back to the period of Ancient Greece and the Roman Empire and has survived despite numerous political changes, diseases and pests. The continuous development of viticulture has enabled the preservation and improvement of indigenous grapa varieties, contributing to the distinctiveness of local wines, with an emphasis on white wines, among which Pošip and Grk hold the most important place. Korčula is known as „the black island of white wines“ since 80% of its territory is covered with white sorts. Mild and specific microclimates contribute to the production of top-quality wines. This approach ensures the preservation of rich winemaking tradition, which is an integral part of the daily life of the local community. Despite global adverse trends, a significant number of young families on Korčula have decided to return to the tradition of winemaking over the past fifteen years. Combining modern scientific achievements and technologies with rich cultural heritage our winemakers have achieved important results, including various domestic and international awards. These continuous efforts have enabled Korčula to position itself among the leading regions in Croatia and beyond. After a panoramic drive through picturesque vineyards you will be taken to one of the most renowned local wineries, where you will be able to enjoy wine tasting and traditional bites. You will get firsthand experience of the winemaking process, and the host will gladly tell stories about family traditions and the challenges they face in their daily work.
